

Meghan McNeill and Jeff Tosh are all agog that their Grade 6 class has read the equivalent of 14 books this size in a special reading program since September. The G.L. Comba Public School students have turned over 35,000 pages, 7,000 of those in December.

Almonte artist Geuer to teach art appreciation night course

By Joan Rivington

Almonte is fortunate to have its own gifted artist, Juan Geuer, who has again agreed to give a three-night course in art appreciation.

The course will cover three days in the Almonte Public Library, Tuesday, March 1, Tuesday March 8, and Monday, March 14.

Mr. Geuer will concentrate on three areas: classical, modernist and post modern, interrelating these from time to time. He will, of course, discuss questions from the floor.

The first evening devoted to classical painting and sculpture will start with the first and greatest Florentine painter of the 1400s, Masaccio, and continue through Renaissance art of the 1500s and 1600s.

The second session will present modernist art of the 20th century.

Post modern, the topic of the third session, will include contemporary work and Mr. Geuer's own pieces.

During the years since 1956 when Mr. Geuer first came to Almonte, his work has evolved from oil painting to sculptures based on physical and mathematical concepts.

One large work is on permanent display in the National Gallery in Ottawa.

Others have been shown and recognized in Holland, Germany, Austria, France, and the United States.

The artist tries to encourage the viewer to transcend his paradigm of reality and experience the interaction of natural forces.

Mr. Geuer is amused by the fact he has been branded a "young radical" by other artists who do not know his age. He tries to incorporate today's thinking.

Just as Renaissance artists broke away from the Gothic with new ideas, today's artists try to demonstrate growth and radical change in our assumptions.

The three-session course will be sponsored by the Almonte and Area Committee for Continuing Learning. Early registration or an expression of interest in the course are requested as numbers need to be known.

Farmers need to take business risks

By Bill Baxter,

Rural Business Consultant

When professional stuntman Dar Robinson decided to leap off Toronto's CN Tower, he didn't just think, "I can do that." Before making that decision, he made a lot of calculations. Things like: length and stretch of the bungee cord, his body weight, wind direction and speed, how much money he could make, and so on.

When a farmer wishes to expand or change his business, he too must make a number of calculations. He must prove to himself that the change will leave him and his family at least as well off as they were before, and preferably better.

Taking a business risk implies that some benefit should result from the proposed change. Profit is the usual goal, although such considerations as living style, net worth, personal comforts and family desires all play an important part in the decision.

The amount of research that an entrepreneur devotes to his plan is often proportional to the amount he or she could make or lose. If the farm is offered as security against a loan to support the new venture, then the operator must be very

Make wearing seatbelt a New Year's resolution

By Larry Till

Kaye Brown could have been a statistic.

A driver with more than 30 years of collision-free experience on the road, Brown (not her real name) was involved in a serious crash last summer that totally wrecked her car. She survived with only minor injuries, and she places the credit squarely on her seatbelt.

"I believe it was the seatbelt that saved me," she said. "It could have been a hundred times worse."

It happened in August when Brown was traveling to her cottage from Toronto. Her car drifted onto the soft shoulder of the highway.

Realizing what was happening, she stepped on the brake, the car veered across the highway, did a complete circle and landed on its roof in the ditch next to oncoming traffic.

It took six people to pry her from the car, which was a write-off. She did suffer some neck pain.

"It was a dreadful pain,"

Brown said. "The top of the roof was crushed, and it pushed my head down onto my neck. But because I had my seatbelt on, I stayed safe and snug inside the car."

Statistics show that Ontario drivers have one of the lowest seatbelt usage rates in the country. Only 84 per cent of Ontario drivers wear their harnesses, below the national average of almost 88 per cent.

"It's frustrating," says Police Chief Henry Harley, head of the Ontario Association of Chiefs of Police Traffic Committee. "Research continues to show that drivers who do not wear seatbelts are 15 times more likely to be killed and five times more likely to be hospitalized than belted drivers."

"Yet each day, more than one million Ontario motorists and passengers take a chance with their life by not wearing their seatbelts."

Starting Jan. 1, drivers caught without seatbelts lose two demerit points off their licenses.

Buckle up!
