Shoppers continue to flock to the Almonte Farmers' Market Saturdays

By Walter Sandberg
Sunny, hot and a great summer's day greeted shoppers last Saturday. The hospital auxiliary had a good turnout and wishes to thank all of the people who bought strawberry shortcakes and especially those who purchased more than one.

Jim Pratt picked peas for 12 hours and came to the market with a bushel and a half of peas. He did not have too many to take home for supper. Don and May Lowery also had peas. They had snow peas, sugar snaps and shelling peas. Carrots showed up for the first time last Saturday and were present at Jim's stall as well as the Hudson's and the Laughing Winds stand.

Kathy Cook of Laughing Winds is back for another year and is replacing Doug Perrault at the Almonte Market. Last year Doug was often first on the market with vegetables as they came into season. We are very pleased to see Kathy back at the market. Kathy also brought broccoli and new potatoes as well as lettuce, onions and beets. She promised to bring swiss chard next week.

David Gilhooly dropped off some radishes and they sold quickly. David is one of the oldtimers and had trouble getting his garden in this year because of the early wet conditions. He said his vegetables are now growing although they are suffering from the heat. He hopes to be back at the market on a regular basis in August.

The vegetables are growing rather inconsistently as one week vegetables are picked and the next week there is nothing followed by a week of good picking. The beans are very slow this year and usually around this time there should be bushels of them. It appears that the beans are still two weeks away and many of the vendors are having problems with the deer having a free breakfast by nipping off the tops of the beans.

Everybody seems to have their favourite remedy to deal with the deer problem. These solutions range from setting of firecrackers at irregular intervals to rapping pine tar soaked clothes on a stake and driving them into the garden at strategic places. Other defenses include very tall fences, sacrificial crops such as cauliflower or crops they like to browse on better, such as clover. It certainly is discouraging watching some beautiful lettuce heads disappear the morning they should be picked for the market.

With all the tribulations we are still getting produce to the market. Next week spinach, onions, lettuce, carrots, peas, cukes, potatoes, beets, mesclun, and broccoli will be on many tables around the market. Raspberries are also late this year and probably will not be on the stands until the following week.

The Almonte Farmers' Market opens at 8:45 a.m. and closes at noon. It is located on the library parking lot.

There are some guidelines to hiring students

By Mike Stewart
Student Employment Officer

As we reach the middle of July, activity at the Human Resources Centre for Students (HRCC-S) is continuing to heat up. The most frequently asked questions at the Centre involves employer curiosity with respect to hiring students.

Many employers phone with questions regarding ages required for certain types of work, minimum wages for students, and the benefits of hiring a student.

A student must be 14 years of age in order to be legally entitled to work in Canada, 15 to work in a factory, and 16 to work in either construction or logging. Anyone dispensing alcohol, such as a bartender, must be at least 19 years of age.

Minimum wage for a student under the age of 18 is $6.40 an hour, while those students ages 18 and up are entitled to $6.85 an hour. Minimum wage for food or liquor servers is $5.95 an hour.

These are some simple guidelines for employers and homeowners who might be interested in hiring a student. However, there are some jobs that do not follow the normal rules with respect to set wages.

One example of this is homeowners who are looking for student caregivers for their children. Babysitting is a profession which is exempt from Ontario minimum wage laws. Thus, it remains up to the employer to settle on a fair and reasonable wage beforehand.

Another example of a job where minimum wage laws remain difficult to apply is with respect to lawn cutting. Due to the fact that many lawns in the area take only half an hour to cut, it does not seem fair that a student might only receive as little as $3.50 for their efforts. A fairer wage for this task would be in the neighbourhood of $10, paying the student on the basis of cutting the entire lawn, rather than for a mere 30 minutes work.

Establishing a fair wage before the job begins will give both a student and an employer a common goal to work towards, and will eliminate any hard feelings in the long run.

If you are an employer interested in hiring a student, contact the Student Employment Centre at 253-3700. Many qualified students are waiting to help you.
